

welcome to number 19 of big belch news. We begin in Florida of all places, where the authorities say the winner of a roach-eating contest died shortly after downing dozens of bugs and worms. Officials at the Broward County Sheriff's Office said on Monday that they were waiting for an autopsy to determine the cause of death. The contestant, Edward Archbold, 32, collapsed at a reptile store in Deerfield Beach soon after winning. Officials said no other contestants fell ill.

Welcome to Columbus day. Columbus Day is the day to celebrate the city of Columbus, Ohio. Columbus is the capital and largest city of Ohio. Columbus has two major league sports teams. In the MLS Soccer league, there is the Columbus Crew, and in the NHL hockey there is the Columbus Blue Jackets. Columbus is also home to Ohio State University, which also has sports teams. The Buckeyes have been successful in recent years in football. And don't forget Cleveland Day, which is January 14.

Well the vice presidents debated. They debated on who could eat the most bugs and worms. The contest on who could eat the most bugs and worms will be in Columbus, Ohio. The winner gets $34,000 while the loser gets tossed into a pit of lions who haven't eaten in three years. Which, of course, aren't dead because an evil scientist brought them back to life. The next step is taking humans who haven't eaten in three years back to life too. He went into the graveyard and dug and dug until he struck oil. He tried to claim the oil as his because he struck it, but it was actually on cemetery property, so it was deemed the cemetery's oil. The name of the cemetery was Arlington National Cemetery. That's how it got to be so rich. Then he dug up John Wilkes Booth, reanimated him and he shot Gerald Ford in the chest 199 times. Ford managed to live on past the assassination attempt and lived for a great while until he had a heart attack while ironically he was driving a Lincoln and fell off the edge of a cliff and died on impact. He was 53. So remember friends, don't go reanimating dead bodies, because if you do, you might lose an oil fight and the guy you reanimate might shoot the president in the chest 199 times.

Fungal meningitis has killed 14 people so far and sickened 170 after they took medication for back pain. This is a good idea to remind people not to have men in your gitis to begin with. And we all know that gitis is short for vaginitis. So women, don't have sex with men so you won't get men in your vagina. Because if you do, your baby you'll have might develop meningitis. And not to mention, you'll be looked upon as a fun gal to have sex with.

In a national survey, Five Guys was voted the best fast food chain. I don't know why, since Jack In the Box has a guy who has a Styrofoam head for a head, while Five Guys have just five guys who don't have Styrofoam heads for heads. I bet they just have normal heads. And Burger King has a king, and McDonald's has a clown, and Taco Bell had a dog, but the Chihuahua met an awful fate when it was killed, ground up, and served in one of its customer's tacos. So when Jack of Jack-In-The-Box dies, you might get pieces of Styrofoam in your burger, which I suppose is better than the recall of Kellogg's Mini-Wheats, which has bits of metal in some boxes. Instead of recalling them, Kellogg's should say they are "prizes" instead. Don't eat prizes.
