

Hi. Welcome to the big belch news. We are filled with sadness and the big belch news flag outside the office is flying at half-mast because the world will no longer have twinkies. Hostess is closing up shop. Seems like the idiots that work there went on strike and rather than settling, Hostess decided to call it quits. Dumbasses.

---

More sad news, as the ducks lost. Stanford beat them in overtime. Dumbasses. Now the civil war will have no implications of anything anymore, except statewide bragging rights. The civil war is this Saturday. Ducks vs. beavers. I think ducks are better than beavers. Beavers are these icky nutria-looking creatures while ducks are cute. I want a pet duck. Ducks also taste better than beavers. Who wants to eat a beaver? Nobody, while lots of people eat ducks. Dumbasses.

---

But with all this sad news, there is one bright spot: The Wii U has officially hit stores. We here got one on launch day. We just waltzed in the store at 8am and there was no line because they had sold most of them at midnight, but we still managed to get one. The controller is huge on this thing, way bigger than a 3ds. But if there's one weak spot to the wii U, it's update loading time. Most take at least 15 minutes. You'd think Nintendo would have figured out a way to make them load faster or get rid of them.

Yep, that's the controller in front, the thing with all the buttons. Huge, isn't it? It's almost as big as the Wii U itself! Dumbasses.

There has been a shocking rise in conflict in Israel, with Israel and the Palestinian-controlled Gaza bombing the hell out of each other. Well, I have a way to end all the conflict. Whoever can get the best score in Tetris takes all. “What are you doing with that box?” asks the TSA agent? “Oh this?” I respond, “I’m taking it to Israel to end all the crisis.” “You’re a bomber, aren’t you?” “No, this is a Nintendo Game Boy. Whoever gets the best score in Tetris gets control of the region.” I said as I pop the Tetris cartridge in. I turned it on. The beep went on. “Sir, I’m going to have to ask you to...” “No, no, wait a minute.” The Tetris theme began to play. “See? It’s Tetris. Not a bomb.” Now I sit and play Tetris on the Game Boy in my jail cell. Bubba, my cell mate, asked me what I was arrested for. “I was arrested for trying to restore peace to the Middle East.” “No, really.” “I’m telling the truth. The key to peace in the middle east is right here.” I showed him my Game Boy. “Where did you get that? I remember those! I used to play the heck out of this when I was a kid! Let me try!” Bubba said. So he played Tetris, and then he said “Well, you DO know what happens next, right?” “You take your dong dong and shove it up my rear, right?” I asked. “You bet.” Then I pressed Select. The jail blew up, killing everyone inside, including me. See, the Select button was never used in any Nintendo Game Boy game. Well, maybe, but not very often. Most people just used the up and down buttons to make selections. So if you are hearing this and have a working Game Boy, give the Select button some love and press it.

Because if you don’t, you’re a dumbass. And you don’t want to be one, do you? And if you don’t have a working Game Boy, buy one on eBay and when it comes in the mail, even if it’s broken, keep pressing Select.