

BIG

belch news

issue 115  january 11, 2016

hello. The powerball jackpot has risen to $800,000,000. That is too much money for one person to win from the lottery. I think there should be a limit to how much you can win from the lottery. Because 800 million dollars is too stupid. Imagine what a charity could do with that. Or just give it all to homeless people. Not one person who already has a place to live. But I guess nobody would pay to give money to homeless people. Heartless morons. Humans are so greedy.

Now you can have 800 million dollars. Just cut it out from this issue of big belch news. I doubt any store will accept it since nothing to buy is worth 800 million dollars. I wonder what the most expensive thing is. I guess a house with a bowling alley, a movie theater, and the house would be constructed out of diamonds. People in diamond houses shouldn't throw stones. That's what adages can teach you. They're very powerful lessons. Jesus often employed them to get in his teachings about how evil god is. If jesus was alive today, he'd shake his head in misery at how greedy we've all gotten.

That's why we're boycotting the powerball lottery. We don't want 800 million dollars. 100 million is good enough. That would set me for life. I'd still make big belch news though, since a butler couldn't write stuff as crappy as I do.

I remember a very short lived promo that Pepsi did where you could literally win a billion dollars. But shocker nobody did. And if nobody won this, it would have risen to $1.3 billion. Imagine being a billionaire just from a lottery ticket. Now you see why this world is filled with stupid morons and I want to leave it. If I had $800,000,000, I'd build a rocket ship and leave. That way I wouldn't have to wait until North Korea builds another H-bomb and bomb Oregon and Washington. Kim Jong Un wants to bomb us. I guess since this is the closest place. Or he's angry that big belch news isn't in Korean.

And if Kim Jong Un is actually reading this, I have a message for him: 우리를 폭탄 마십시오.

Okay, that may look like hieroglyphics, so I'll translate to all the readers out there who don't know Korean. It's Korean for "please do not bomb us." Or at least it's supposed to be. It could say any amount of things except that since I don't know Korean. I hope it says "please do not bomb us." I wonder if it is correct. Or if they read from up to down like Japanese people do. That's right, that's how they read. It would be nice to do that. Idea for a theme issue, perhaps? Have it all be in Japanese and have nobody be able to read it except for Japanese people and they would groan at all the bad jokes I make.

A guy walks into a bar with a monkey on his back. He asks the bartender "Have you read the latest issue of Big belch news?" The bartender says "Nope." So the guy says "Well, there's a joke in it that's really funny." The bartender says "I like funny jokes. Tell it to me." "A guy walks into a bar with a monkey on his back. He asks the bartender "Have you read the latest issue of Big belch news?" The bartender says "Nope." So the guy says "Well, there's a joke in it that's really funny." The bartender says "I like funny jokes. Tell it to me."

A guy walks into a bar with a monkey on his back. He asks the bartender "Have you read the latest issue of Big belch news?" The bartender says "Nope." So the guy says "Well, there's a joke in it that's really funny." The bartender says "I like funny jokes. Tell it to me."

A guy walks into a bar with a monkey on his back. He asks the bartender "Have you read the latest issue of Big belch news?" The bartender says "Nope." So the guy says "Well, there's a joke in it that's really funny." The bartender says "I like funny jokes. Tell it to me."

And it goes on forever. Just like the song that never ends. But it's time for this issue to end, so goodbye.